Training Brains to Become Minds: Neuropsychology for Teachers

Why you should attend

The explosion of knowledge in the neurosciences has been phenomenal in the last ten years. The new discoveries of brain dynamics based on neuroimaging are replacing older static brain models. Likewise education is on the verge of changing from pedagogy to a brain-based learning model. For example, teachers routinely take courses in how to teach, but few have ever taken a course in memory, the process of all learning. Dr. Chin will give teachers an accurate and useable neuropsychological model of brain functioning that can be applied to many types of learning, emotional and developmental disorders. These strategies can be used by all teachers with whole classes or individual students.

Participants will:

- Explore why understanding the brain is critical for increasing student achievement and improving behavior.
- Learn five aspects of brain research that every educator must know.
- Develop an understanding of how the brain functions and learns (neuroplasticity, memory dynamics, stress and learning, executive functions, theory of mind).
- Learn brain-based approaches to guide curriculum development and classroom interventions that promote increased learning, engagement, and achievement for all students.
- Learn several teacher friendly, brain-based strategies for developing “habits of mind” such as self regulation, motivation, and problem solving.
- Learn practical, brain-based strategies that nurture classroom climates characterized by safety, engagement, team-work, and high levels of thinking necessary for students with neurodevelopmental disorders (e.g., ADHD, Asperger Syndrome, PTSD, etc).
- Have opportunities to ask questions and role-play strategies.
